

WHAT IS CLAIMED IS:

1. A method of playback of image in a digital TV transmission /reception system characterized by providing in a circuit network a buffer system, which has a function of, while continuing the actual real-time broadcast, recording and erasing in sequence said broadcast image and sound linked to the image in units of second or minute and, by operation of said buffer system, enabling to reproduce the already broadcast image and/or sound.
2. A method of playback of image in a digital TV transmission/reception system characterized by providing in a circuit network a buffer system, which has a function of, while continuing the actual real-time broadcast, recording and erasing in sequence said broadcast image and sound linked to the image in units of second or minute and, by operation of said buffer system, enables to reproduce the previously broadcast image and/or sound on the currently broadcast images, by forming two screens consisting of said image and an image which has been previously broadcast.